

SPOKE IN FAVOR OF RECALL OF JUDGES

Frederick Landis, Progressive Candidate for Lieutenant Governor Addressed Big Audience.

MANY REFORMS ADVOCATED

Declared He Was Not Radical But Only Desired to Put People In Control of Their Government.

Frederick Landis, candidate for lieutenant governor on the bull moose ticket, opened the progressive speaking campaign in Seymour Wednesday night with an address in which he advocated the initiative, referendum, recall of public officials and judges, woman suffrage, election of United States senators by direct vote of the people, free school books, trust "busting," good road laws and numerous other things. The meeting was held at the Majestic theater and was attended by several hundred democrats and republicans who were curious to hear the policies of the new party expounded by the candidate who is recognized as a pleasing and entertaining speaker.

One of the most noticeable features of the meeting was the recent hair cut of the speaker. For a long time he has been known as "Frederick the uncombed," and a number of the spectators remarked that Landis was a much more handsome man with a yard or so of his bushy locks removed. The improvement would have been made a long time ago had it been left to the direct vote of the people, and it was rumored in political circles that had the recall been in force it would have been restored to as a last effort had not the change taken place. He was attired in his usual campaign uniform with the exception of the big corneob pipe.

He told how the country was going to the bad under the two old parties, how a few of the old regulars had been converted and washed of their political sins and were now organized and ready to save the country from ruin. His speech was filled with catchy phrases, and he had a remedy for every political and governmental ill. He said that the old maxim was that everything was fair in politics, but that the new party had revised that and had adopted the principle that nothing is fair in politics that is not fair at the fireside. He declared that the new party had a specific plan to follow by which popular government could be restored and the people could rule. This program was quite lengthy in detail, but in short could be secured only by the election of bull moose candidates. He gave some time to the tariff question making the plea for the bi-partisan tariff commission so that the question could be "lifted from the level of a horse trade and placed on the basis of statesmanship." He lambasted the trusts, that is with the exception of the harvester and steel trusts, and said that the progressive leaders would enact rules so that the directors of naughty monopolies could be sent to the penitentiary instead of paying fines. They have no objection to fines, he declared, for they only

SECOND CROP.

Calvin Bedel Has Ripe Blackberries on His Farm.

Calvin Bedel, of this city, who owns a farm near Beech Grove, is picking the second crop of blackberries. Although the crop is very small, the berries are fully matured and are much larger than those of the first crop.

Reports from several places in Indiana indicate that the cherry trees are showing little regard for the season, and some of them are putting forth blossoms for the second time. Rev. F. M. Huckleberry of this city has a tree that is in full bloom and the blossoms are fully matured. Samuel Wertz, of Columbus, has a tree which shed its leaves several weeks ago, but has lately grown another set of foliage and is now in full bloom. M. L. Harris, who lives in Ohio county, has two cherry trees in blossom, and the leaves are as fresh as in early spring. Frequently when the fall is late the trees will bloom a second time, but it is rather unusual this year because of the cool weather.

SOLDIER DEAD

Oscar Abel Receives Message of Death of His Brother.

Deputy Prosecutor Oscar Abel received a telegram Wednesday night that his brother, Charles W. Abel, a soldier in the United States Army, had died at Ft. Bliss, Texas. The message was a shock to Mr. Abel as he did not know that his brother was ill. He at once forwarded instructions to ship the remains to Shoals, the family home where the funeral services will be held. It is expected the remains will reach that place Sunday morning.

Charles W. Abel was thirty-seven years of age and enlisted in Company B, Twenty-second Infantry, and two years ago reenlisted in the same regiment and company. For some time he had been stationed at Ft. Bliss to patrol the Mexican borders. He has seen considerable active service and took part in thirty-one engagements in the Philippine Islands. He is survived by his mother and several brothers.

CHAUTAUQUA MEETING

Persons Interested in Move Will Meet Tonight.

Persons interested in the chautauqua movement will meet this evening at 8 o'clock at the office of Clark B. Davis, secretary of the Commercial Club. It has been impossible to extend personal invitations to all persons interested, but they are invited to attend the meeting.

It is desired that a permanent organization be effected tonight and that arrangements be made so the work of securing the talent can be started. Since it seems probable that the chautauqua will meet with success considerable interest has been taken in the movement and a number volunteered to do what they can to push the proposition along.

Mrs. Sallie Armstrong, one of the most prominent and widely known ladies in Lawrence county, died early this morning at her home in Springfield.

Her daughter, Mrs. Harley Jackson, of this city was called to her bed side Sunday.

Mrs. Armstrong has frequently visited here and has a number of friends here.

ONLY NINE CASES FILED LAST MONTH

Police Court Docket For September Was Light, Establishing Record for Several Years.

THREE UP FOR INTOXICATION

Two Fined for Assault and Battery, Three for Riding Trains and One for Violating Ordinance.

The docket of the police court shows that only nine cases were tried before the mayor during the month of September, which is the record for any month during the past three years. It is said that the police court is the thermometer of the morals of a city and if this be true it indicates that conditions in Seymour are getting better.

During the month only three arrests were made for public intoxication while the average number is from fifteen to twenty. One conviction was secured for violation of the city ordinance, and two men were arrested and fined for assault and battery. Three prisoners were brought before the bar of justice for riding trains and in each case pleaded guilty and were fined.

During the month an affidavit was filed against Oliver Snyder, the young Brown county school teacher burglar upon the charge of burglary. Snyder will probably be tried during the October term of court, as the physicians of the hospital at the Jeffersonville Reformatory say that he has fully recovered so that he will be able to stand trial. Snyder was taken to Jeffersonville for safe keeping on the day following his burglaries. His arrest, however, was made in August but the affidavit was not prepared until a few days ago.

The number of convictions in the police court does not mean that there were no other arrests during the month. Quite a number of cases are tried each month before the justices of peace, but such cases go on record upon the justices' dockets and do not appear upon the records of the police court.

Although a few arrests have been made the police have been busy during the month and have answered several calls where no arrests were made. Frequently the officers are called to quell a little family trouble, but in the majority of such cases neither the husband nor the wife will swear out an affidavit against the other. The police have adopted the rule not to interfere with family difficulties unless their services are needed to protect some member of the family from harm. Before this rule was adopted the officers when called would sometime swear out a warrant against the member of the family causing the trouble, but before the trial was called the difficulty would be settled and there would be no one to appear as prosecuting witness.

Sanitary Officer George Wolfe, who was recently appointed as a member of the police force, has been busy during the month visiting the various parts of the city and giving orders to trim trees and other instructions where he found the city ordinances were violated.

DURBIN IS NEXT

Republican Candidate for Governor Will Be Here Tuesday.

Col. Winfield T. Durbin, republican candidate for governor, will give an address in this city at the Majestic theatre Tuesday night. The Jackson county republican committee received word this morning that Col. Durbin would be here Tuesday night and is making arrangements for a big meeting at that time.

Col. Durbin was formerly governor of the state of Indiana and is recognized as one of the best governors the state has ever had. He is a man who believes that the state government should be conducted by the careful and economic policies followed. He realizes the present financial condition of the state and knows just how this can be remedied. No voter in Jackson county should miss the opportunity to hear Col. Durbin who was elected by a big majority before and who proved equal to the trust the people of Indiana placed in him.

Eight Hour Schedule.

There was a big decrease in the time at the shops Tuesday when it was announced that the work day would be cut to eight hours. The change was effective Tuesday and includes all departments in the engine and car shops. Heretofore the men have been given all the time they wanted, and especially was this so in the car department where some of the men were allowed to go to work at 6 in the morning and work until 7 at night. Fifty men were laid off in the car department Monday and it would be no surprise to hear of some being laid off soon. The instructions to cut the time came as a surprise to the local officials as it was understood that more men were to be taken on in the car shop where their services are greatly needed to handle the large amount of work that is now on hand. —Washington Democrat.

MORGAN IS CALLED BEFORE COMMITTEE

Wall Street Financier Testified About Campaign Contributions at Senate Investigation.

SAID HE GAVE $150,000 IN 1904

Effort Will Be Made to Find Out The Story of Big Business in Politics.

Washington, October 3.—J. Pierpont Morgan, for the first time in his life today faced a congressional investigating committee. He was the first important witness to testify before the senate committee which is probing campaign contributions.

The committee proposed to learn from Morgan's own lips the story of Big Business in politics—not only how much the financier himself has given to past presidential candidates, but also regarding his interest in money raised by others. He was expected to tell of his alleged $100,000 contribution in 1904 to the Roosevelt campaign and also if he contributed as much or more to the Taft coffers four years ago. Whether in 1904 he was one of the contributors to the alleged Harriman fund of $250,000, testified to by Senator Penrose and others, was another inquisition planned.

One of the committeemen said he proposed to ascertain whether Morgan's campaign contributions were "nonpartisan or bipartisan."

Morgan's testimony was expected to have direct bearing on that of yesterday by George R. Sheldon, 1908 treasurer of the Republican national committee.

He testified that he gave $100,000 at one time and later contributed $50,000 in the campaign of 1904.

ORDINANCE NOT SIGNED

Mayor Swope Has Not Placed Signature to the New Tax Levy.

The ordinance fixing the tax levy at $1.36 on the $100, which was passed Monday night at a special council meeting, has not been signed by Mayor Swope. Unless the ordinance is signed by the Mayor on or before Monday, October 7, it will not be effective and the present levy of $1.16 will stand. The mayor has the power to veto the ordinance or he may fail to sign it before Monday, and in either case it is void.

It is known that Mayor Swope has been opposed to the higher levy and while he has not officially stated that he will not sign the ordinance, it is generally understood that he will not place his signature to it. When it became known that there was a possibility of a bond issue with the higher levy considerable opposition was registered by the citizens.

The Girl and The Older Woman.

In an article on the "Girl And The Older Woman," in the October Woman's Home Companion, the author, Anne Bryan McCall, says in part:

"One rule that the girl and the older woman should make for themselves and stick to rigidly, is that there shall be none of the usual sentimental demonstrations of this part of affection—kissing, and petting, and the like. It is, first of all, a poor affection that needs to prove itself in these ways; but it is more than that: it is a morbid affection that craves that sort of thing.

"I have made a point of writing this article both for the older woman and for the girl. I would like to make you each see, if I can, your responsibility in the matter: the responsibility of the girl to keep a good hold on herself; not to permit herself to indulge in sentimentalism; and the responsibility of the older is not to play upon the girl's sensitiveness, and neither to encourage nor accept any but the highest, finest, sanest type of hero-worship.

"After all, the main responsibility rests with the older woman."

CORROBORATIVE EVIDENCE HERE

Archbold's Testimony Confirmed
By Sheldon.

STANDARD OIL CONTRIBUTION

Treasurer of Republican Committee
Who Took Over the Books From Mr.
Bliss, Tells the Senate Investigation Committee the Source of Some of the Largest Contributions to the G.
O. P. War Chest in the Year 1904.

Washington, Oct. 3.—That $100,000
of Standard Oil money went to the Roosevelt 1904 campaign fund, the senate investigating committee has established conclusively. George R. Sheldon, treasurer of the Republican national committee, is the witness who confirmed Senator Penrose's charges and the subsequent statement of John D.
Archbold of the Standard Oil company.

Mr. Sheldon testified that the late Cornelius N. Bliss, when he retired as treasurer of the national committee in 1908, turned over to him a list of men and corporation officers who had contributed to the Roosevelt 1904 fund.

"Was there any contribution by the Standard Oil company on that list?"
asked Senator Clapp.

"Yes, sir," was Mr. Sheldon's answer.

"How much was it?" asked the chairman again.

"One hundred thousand dollars, but it was down as a contribution by John D. Archbold."

This is the first corroborative evidence that has been obtained by the senate committee in support of the Penrose charges since John D. Archbold testified. Colonel Roosevelt has never denied flatly that the contribution was received, but has maintained that he knew nothing of it and that he issued the strictest instructions to George B. Cortelyou, his national chairman, that no Standard Oil money was to be accepted. Mr. Cortelyou has testified under oath that he knew of no Standard Oil contribution. John D. Archbold, on the other hand, has asserted that Mr. Bliss informed him that both Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Cortelyou knew of the contribution; that it was appreciated by them and that he was representing them when he applied for a second gift of $150,000.

Mr. Sheldon added another important fact when he testified that Mr.
Bliss's statement of the 1904 campaign receipts and expenditures, which was audited by Mr. Sheldon, did not indicate in any way that the $100,000 of Standard Oil money ever was returned.

Mr. Sheldon testified that there were three other contributions of $100,000 each by powerful financial interests to the Roosevelt 1904 fund, namely: The Standard Oil company, $100,000; J. P.
Morgan & Co., $100,000; H. C. Frick, $100,000; George J. Gould, $100,000.

Mr. Sheldon was able to recall these contributions because of their size.
The witness made the statement that of the $1,900,000 raised by Mr. Bliss in that Roosevelt campaign, 73 1/2 per cent was given by corporations.

Democrats eagerly seized upon this statement as a complete confirmation of the charges made by Judge Parker in that campaign, that Mr. Roosevelt's fight was being financed almost entirely by the trusts.

Joseph M. Dixon, Mr. Roosevelt's campaign manager, was another witness examined by the committee. He proved to be most obstreperous, and the committee spent several hours wrangling with him in a most undig-nified manner. The committee was highly incensed at the charges made by Dixon that the committee is being manipulated so as to investigate Colonel Roosevelt's campaign and no other. It seemed at times as if Senator Dixon and Senator Pomerene would come to blows. Senator Pome-rene at one time suggested that the committee ought to send Dixon to jail for contempt, and insisted that the Roosevelt manager's conduct was un-becomingly either as a senator or a gentleman.

The Roosevelt chairman, after making wholesale charges against the Taft and Wilson campaign managers and others, declined absolutely to disclose sources of his information. He refused to answer questions, and the unseemly wrangle was terminated abruptly by Chairman Clapp dismissing the witness from the stand. Only two facts of importance were brought out in the course of Dixon's testimony.
One was that he personally had raised $95,000 in the Roosevelt pre-convention campaign. This was in addition to the $14,000 collected by the campaign treasurer, the $52,000 raised in New York county, and the $130,000
expended by William Flinn in Pennsylvania. This brought the total of the Roosevelt campaign as disclosed to date up to $420,000.

Mr. Dixon also testified that George W. Perkins, Frank A. Munsey and Dan R. Hanna each contributed $25, 000 to his fund of $95,000. This brings the total contributions of Mr. Perkins to the Roosevelt pre-convention campaign up to $62,000. Mr. Munsey's to tal is $55,000 and Mr. Hanna $50,000.
Senator Dixon acknowledged that he called on these three men whenever his war chest ran low and that he tried to distribute the burden equally among them.

raise the price of commodities a little higher whenever a fine is assessed. He asserted that the reforms must come through the state government, and for that reason advocated the election of Albert J. Beveridge as governor, and impliedly Fredrick Landis as lieutenant governor.

The speaker said that he heartily endorsed the initiative, referendum and recall. The public has been misinformed regarding these new reforms, he declared, and that there was nothing to them except giving the people control of their own government. He declared that in private life a man would not stand for a dishonest employee and that he was in favor of taking a crooked public servant by the neck and throw him out of public life as soon as he becomes crooked.

In speaking of the recall he said that he was even more radical than his party, for if he had his way he would recall a judge quicker than a sheriff for the latter "comes from the common people while a judge is made of better stuff." Court houses were defined as citadels of procrastination
where the ends of justice were defeated. Landis declared that he proposed to bring the judges down from the kingdom of cobwebs to the kingdom of reason and common sense. When this is done, according to the speaker, there would be less delay in legal procedure and justice would be more readily administered. He promised that his party, if placed in power, would enact a law providing for the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people within sixty days after the legislature convened.
He said his party was opposed to the policies of corporations, contracting with firms and individuals for working out their road taxes and that this would be changed if the progressive party is successful. He assailed the school book trust and emphasized that the progressive party would provide free school books for all school children. He said that the progressive party favored woman suffrage.
They should be taken into partnership and as soon as this is done child slavery will cease.

He declared that Taft was out of the fight and that the voters must make their selection between Woodrow Wilson and Theodore Roosevelt.
He declared that Taft has been out of the game since the "descendants of Jesse James held their reunion at the Coliseum in Chicago in June." He said that the old line republicans were trying to deliver the regular vote to Wilson in order to defeat Roosevelt. In the next breath he declared that the rank and file of all parties were honest, but that the leaders were crooked. He scored Woodrow Wilson declaring that he was to unsophisticated and is not qualified to protect himself against the lobbyists and other influences which would be brought to bear upon him.

He praised Theodore Roosevelt, Albert J. Beveridge, but in his haste to close forgot to say a good word for Boss Bill Plinn and that great proteger of the peoples' rights, George Perkins.

BUSINESS AND CONSERVATION

The Merchant and Manufacturer Needed In Politics.

NATION IS CALLING FOR THEM

Along the Line of the Growing Demand For a Broad, Progressive Conservation Policy in the Extension of the Country's Interests and Industries, One of the State's Most Progressive Manufacturers Offers a Word in Season.

Indianapolis, Oct. 3.—Dr. Edward A.
Rumely of Laporte, Ind., the managing head of the M. Rumely company, was one of the speakers before the National Conservation congress today, and his utterances were as inspiring as his own career has been extraordinary.

At the age of 22 he was a medical student in Germany; at 29 the managing head of the second largest Indiana corporation—with a capital of

EDWARD A. RUMELY.

$22,000,000—and that corporation itself the direct result of his own constructive work. His company employs several thousand men, has factories in the United States and Canada and branch houses throughout the world.
The man who accomplished this is himself only thirty years of age.

Mr. Rumely has been identified with the conservation movement from its inception, and is one of the most forceful figures in that large band of young men which has risen so spiritedly to the call of this most important of the nation's causes. Naturally he firmly believes that all business men should take an active and conscientious interest in politics, and continually is urging young men to make a sufficiently close study of the political problems which confront the nation to enable them to enter intelligently upon the full duties of citizenship. Mr.

Rumely himself is actively identified with the cause of progressivism in state and nation, and is one of Indiana's most attentive political observers.

Progressive Conservation Policy.

Along the line of the business man's interest in politics Mr. Rumely has well defined views. "The secondary industries in America have never been organized nor recognized in our state and national policy in due measure,"
he said. "The primary or basic industries, producing raw materials such as steel, lumber, cotton, coal, petroleum, were easily standardized, and soon concentrated into large industrial units, centralized financially in New York, and because of their close and effective organization, able to exert a strong if not controlling political influence upon our government."

"The secondary industries that we must now begin to encourage are characterized by a wide variety of work.
They have different standards, are not easily susceptible to organization on a large scale, and hence politically have never acted as a concerted and effective force. The National Association of Manufacturers has been held together largely by an exaggerated emphasis upon the struggle against trade unionism. This ideal of strife with labor is no longer sufficient, and many believe that much more can be gained by co-operating with labor to build up the productive power of our people."

"Today the interests of the secondary manufacturer coincide closely with the demands of the conservation movement. Reckless exploitation, leading to exhaustion of any natural store, threatens the very existence of his business."

"In order to produce in large quantities, the secondary manufacturer must sell into broad markets, must use freely and extensively the transportation systems of the country."

"Freight rates alone could become an obstacle to the further expansion of the business. For the shipment of smaller parts a well-organized, prompt parcels or express service must be possible."

"Telegraph, telephone and mail service to facilitate universal communication with the market are examples of the factors in the conduct of such a business. And in every one of these the interests of the secondary manufacturer are identical with the interests of individuals, and politically the secondary manufacturer will be forced to co-operate with a progressive conservation policy."

CHAPTER IV.

A Haphazard Meeting.

I was to make my bow to society the following week, the occasion being that wonderful reception at which Laura Hazard was to be the bright particular star. She was to hold the center of the stage in the limelight while I was to be tucked away on a back line of the chorus to find out Who's Who in Society and Why. It was a strenuous time for me, those days preceding the reception. I at days went home so tired that Jo said I talked in my sleep about "color" and "texture," and jumped sometimes as if the dressmaker had stuck me with a pin. I wasn't to become an actual member of the family until they moved back home from the hotel.

Besides the mother, son and daughter, there was one other member of the family, John Crowninshield, Mrs. Hazard's brother, a lawyer whom the society reporters had let alone more than ten years ago. He had insisted upon becoming a confirmed old bachelor, and had dropped out of sight socially. He might have been a bachelor, but I was prepared to deny that he was old. True, there was a bit of silver at his temples, but it merely made him look distinguished and harmonized beautifully with his eyes; gray and clear that looked right through you like Mr. Partridge's, only more so. He had a handclasp that made you feel immediately as if he were your long-lost brother, and you'd swear by him to your very last breath.

Laura Hazard was tall, very blond, very pretty, altogether distingue—if you say such a thing about a woman—with broad shoulders and thin lips, giving one the impression that she had just materialized from a picture in a fashion book. She slipped into every-day conversation with me without any reference as to who I was or what I was. It gave me a clear understanding of my position. I was one of them; there was to be no doubt of me. I had made good until I proved otherwise. They had stuck me up on the top rung of the ladder, and all I had to do was to stay there.

"Who's Going to Pitch?" I Asked.

My meeting with Hap took place on a crowded street at a time when I was more or less disheveled from a whole morning's seance in a milliner's shop. We were about to rush back to the hotel and grab luncheon—Jo saw me only at breakfast and when I was asleep—for we had an engagement with the dressmaker at two, when just as we reached the curb a young man driving a long, low, rakish, battleship-gray car, drew up behind the limousine and waved to us. "Just want to say I can't stop for luncheon, mother," he called. "Got a deal on with Peabody and haven't time."

He was about to change gear preparatory to leaving when he began to stare at me and I knew he was looking at the wisps of hair that dangled about my ears. His mother signaled to him.

"You must not neglect your meals for any deal," she said firmly. "You must take time—this is Miss Codman—think of your health. Let Peabody wait. Besides, luncheon is ready anyhow. We're in a hurry, too. I ordered it by telephone."

He acknowledged me and I bowed to him while she was still talking, and we both smiled. It was funny. The next minute I was in the limousine.

"Oh, all right," he agreed cheerfully, and waited for us to start. I don't know what he thought as he followed; I don't know if he knew who I was. I leaned back in the limousine—thinking of only one thing—that I was missing the best club match at tennis in years, a thing I'd have given my head to see.

We were caught in a jam out of which the gray car wriggled ahead of us, so that when we reached the corner we found it waiting for us at the curb and a most impatient

"PROUD OF YOU, MY SON"

(Copyright.)

man pacing up and down the hallway of the suite.

"I've just got to see Peabody," he said, "and be at the ball game at three."

I knew my job when I saw it coming straight toward me.

"Who's going to pitch?" I asked. It was the only thing I could think of in a hurry. It was electrical! He stopped short in his wild stride, stared at me an instant, and this time he did not look at the wisps of hair dangled about my ears; then he put out his hand, grabbed mine and pumped it up and down enthusiastically.

"Say, do you really understand baseball?" he asked.

"I do, really." The question was so identical his mother's that I smiled and he grinned back, thinking he understood even if he didn't. "I can almost tell when a man is going to bunt by the way he walks to the plate."

He grinned again, took a step closer—actually I thought he was going to kiss me—and gave my hand another up and down, with some additional pats for good measure.

"You're too good to be true," he announced.

"Goodness me!" I laughed. "Why, there are plenty of girls who understand baseball."

"Well, they don't travel in my set. No. Stupidest lot of girls you ever saw," he confided. A thought struck him so suddenly and pleasantly that it fairly jumped from his eyes, and he took another step closer. Really he kept me scared! "Don't you want to go this afternoon?"

Of course I couldn't, or the next afternoon, or even the next week. We were dated up for every day. I was awfully sorry. I knew right off I was going to like him. He was so easy to know, and good to look at, too, strong and husky, his skin tanned already as if he kept pretty much outdoors. His thick blond hair was worn long, a relic of football days, I suppose, and a characteristic forelock hung aslant one clear gray eye. Those eyes run in the family.

We had an enthusiastic luncheon. It couldn't have been otherwise bubbling from such an enthusiastic young man with Mrs. Hazard holding in on that chuckle of hers while we talked "curves" and "fade-aways" and things she didn't understand any more than so much Chinese.

When the gray car finally drew away from the curb down below, Mrs. Hazard looked at me and chuckled.

"It worked!" she whispered. "It actually worked!" And as she looked at me one eye was curiously a-twinkle.

That was the only conversation I had with Hap until the night of the reception. I didn't have time. Sometimes I saw him from the limousine, but it was just a "zip" and we were both gone; sometimes I nodded to him across the room with the telephone receiver glued to my ear and my lips ready to frame an order when the "hello" came. I was Secretary of Frivolous Affairs, all right enough. There were days when we almost dined in the limousine between dressmakers and milliners, other days when we saw everybody down to the candlestick-maker; again when I copied memoranda until my arm ached.

And I had vainly fancied myself Cinderella with Mrs. Hazard as the fairy Godmother. When she waved the wand which was giving me my job, all I had to do was to come down the grand stairway looking for the Prince. In my opinion Cinderella had a snap sitting at home before the kitchen fire while the people who had that fall affair in hand got it going.

One little incident happened that gave me something to think over during the drudgery of those days, and, with everything that happened afterward, I put it down in my mind as the beginning of things. Laura and I were on our way down the grand stairway, and she was suddenly looked through the door of the car. "The Duc de Trouville!" she exclaimed, as another car passed.

I craned my neck inelegantly, but of course I did not see him; the car was gone. I knew that the duke had come to America to—well, who shall question the motives of a duke?

Something in her expression, the way she turned and looked at me seriously, intently, made the words significant. I was inexperienced enough then to jump at conclusions.

"The Duc de Trouville!" I repeated. "Is he the lucky man?" The question was impertinent; I knew it the moment I had uttered it.

"Well, no, he isn't," she answered, and laughed to cover my embarrassment. "In fact, that's all newspaper stuff about announcing my engagement. The house just needed doing over and it was done over, but not for a wedding. I shall get married some time, but not now. I am not engaged to anybody, and His Grace is still looking for the biggest prize. He's worth it, too—his title goes back to the time when titles in France meant something. I could win him if I tried; I've a pretty snug fortune, and of course a great deal would depend on the generosity of a settlement when the Duchess de Trouville is selected."

I smiled and she laughed outright. "But somehow he's so important. He travels with a retinue, you know—I guess you call it that; secretary, two valets, a butler and a chauffeur—and I'm very much afraid he only appeals to my sense of humor. That isn't the proper spirit to go at marrying a duke."

"The Duchess de Trouville!" I mused. I was thinking of the bucolic gentleman pitted against the title. "It's a pretty name."

"Yes, but I know one prettier," she smiled, then suddenly: "I've been wondering if a title is worth all the fuss and bother. If I would always be contented with just that? What do you think about it, Louie?" It was the first time she had called me by my first name.

"I'm rather old-fashioned, Laura," I replied, "and the continental idea of arranged marriages doesn't appeal to me. I believe in marrying for love, wading through fire and water and all that sort of thing if necessary, and then abiding by the consequences. If you love the duke, marry him; if not—"

"I don't love him; I don't even like him," she interrupted. "He's so polite, so terribly polite, so clever, so smooth, so polished that—well, I always feel just a little suspicious of him."

"Gracious!" I laughed. "Why, objection usually comes from exactly opposite reasons. You wouldn't have him otherwise, would you?"

"I don't know. Once Winthrop shook me good for skating on ice which he had warned me might give way." Winthrop, whose last name is Abbott, is the bucolic gentleman. "And, well, I'm awfully fond of Winthrop."

We both laughed

THAT COURT DECISION.

In justification of the bull moose plank for the recall of judges Fred Landis, in his speech here last night, said that a Purdue student lost a leg in a railroad wreck, while on his way to a foot ball game at Indianapolis. That he recovered a judgment in the trial court for this injury and that the Judge instructed the jury that they might take into account in estimating his damages his physical suffering, and that the Supreme Court of this state reversed this judgment for the reason that the trial Judge in the instruction assumed that there was physical suffering and did not say that the jury might consider his physical suffering "if any."

The case stated exists only in the mind of the speaker and no such case was ever heard or decided by the Supreme Court. The true case was as follows: On October 31st, 1903, a Big Four train carrying a large number of Purdue students to a foot ball game was wrecked in the northern part of the city of Indianapolis. In this wreck a number were killed and many others injured. The Big Four Company compromised and settled all claims known to them on account of persons killed and injured. But two years after the wreck on the 25th of October 1905 and within six days of the time when all such claims would be barred by the Statute of Limitations a complaint was filed by a young man named Case, demanding $15,000 damages. He recovered upon the trial a judgment for $7,000 and from this judgment an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court. The facts as shown by the record on appeal were that he was 19 years old at the time of the wreck, that he was met down town on Illinois street by two friends about an hour afterward and went with them to a telegraph office and sent a message home that he was not hurt or injured; that he was a freshman who had just entered college in September and that he resumed his studies within a day or two after the wreck and continued to the end of the school year and the following year he worked on his father's farm, plowing corn, operating the cultivator and husking corn in the fall of 1904, and in conversation with friends said that he was one of the lucky persons who did not get hurt by the collision.

A part of his testimony is in the following language: "I do not know that I received a scratch on my body in the wreck. I do not think I had any. Did not lose a single drop of my own blood. I do not know that I had a single spot of any kind—red, blue or black—on the surface of my body. I did not have a discoloration of any kind on my body as a result of that wreck. I did not lose my hat in the wreck. The blood that I got on my trousers came from somebody else. At the time of the wreck I had some money in my pockets. Did not lose it. Did not lose anything out of my pocket. Did not lose any part of my apparel. I do not know whether I was thrown out of the window when the crash came. Do not remember that my clothing was torn in any place. The ticket which I purchased at Lafayette to Indianapolis called for a return trip, and I think I used it in going home. There was no bruise or discoloration, cut or bump on my head at the place where it felt sore, and not a wound of any kind on my body. So far as I know I was not struck a single blow. From the time that the crash came until I got down town I do not know whether I was asleep or not. I was not sick or disabled in any way that affected my memory that I know of. I have had no trouble with my heart and none with my lungs. After the wreck my chest was sore, and I coughed some. My kidneys and liver are alright." 174 Ind. 369.

The suit was brought in his own name and it was shown that he had not been emancipated and being a minor his time and services belonged to his father until he was 21 years of age. No claim was made in the complaint for loss of time, and it was conceded by both sides that there was no evidence that Case had lost any time; but the court in its charge to the jury said that in assessing damages the jury might take into consideration "the loss of time, if any, occasioned by the immediate effects of his injury."

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment for the reason that the direction to take into account loss of time in the absence of any claim for or evidence of time lost, and especially in view of the fact that any time lost did not belong to the plaintiff, was erroneous, and must be presumed to have wronged the defendant company in the absence of any showing that it was harmless. It is very clear to anyone that such a judgment ought to have been reversed and that no court assuming to do justice could affirm such a verdict.

If the court had rendered such a decision as that indicated by Mr. Landis it ought not only to be recalled but to be abolished. On the other hand a public speaker who will either ignorantly or maliciously misrepresent and malign the highest court of the state for the purpose of deceiving the people and destroying their confidence in the courts is not worthy of the support of the voters.

President Taft's confidence in his re-election grows with the progress of the campaign. He is not exultingly confident nor merely optimistic, but feels assured of success by the trend of public sentiment as manifested in State elections and in reports obtained by his political agents.

We have lived with Mr. Taft as president long enough to know that he is not a bluffer or four-flusher. He is a sincere and earnest man, out of place, perhaps as his political enemies allege, as a politician, but one free from the acts of the dissembler. We may therefore accept his forecast of the election as the expression of his honest belief, however faulty it may appear to others.

Mr. Taft has displayed admirable courage under discouraging circumstances. He has not lost faith in the rank and file of the Republican party, regardless of the divisions among its leaders, and believes that when its time comes the people will rally at the polls and elect him. This must be the kind of faith that is said to have the power of moving mountains. —Shelbyville News.

In his address Wednesday night Mr. Landis declared that President Taft was not in the race, that the voters must choose between Wilson and Roosevelt, and tried to leave the impression that the republicans were joining hands with the democrats for the election of Governor Wilson. In this Mr. Landis is mistaken. The rank and file of the republican party are honest in their belief that the principles of the party are right and are supporting President Taft as steadfastly as they can. Mr. Landis is of course after votes and knows that the majority of them must come from the republicans. That statement originated with the progressive leaders and they are the only ones who are shouting it now. The race is between Taft and Wilson and the people must choose between them. The public realized that the management of the government has much to do with the general prosperity of the nation and that President Taft has conducted all departments in an honest and fair manner and that he is entitled to reelection. And the republicans will support their candidate.

Every voter who has registered but has moved to another precinct must get a certificate of removal before October 4. This is important and should not be overlooked.

"A dangerous ambition more often lurks behind the specious mask of zeal for the rights of the people than under the forbidden appearance of zeal for the firmness and efficiency of government. History will teach us that the former has found a much more certain road to the introduction of despotism than the latter, and that of those men who have overturned the liberties of republics the greatest number have begun their career by paying an obsequious court to the people; commending demagogues and ending Tyrants."—Alexander Hamilton.

MONEY SAVING OPPORTUNITY

New Series "D" Co-operative Building and Loan Association Will Start Monday, Oct. 7.

Do you like to save money?

Do you like to own your own home?

Do you like to increase your business?

If so, it is worth your while to take some stock in the new Series "D" of the Co-operative Building and Loan Association which will start next Monday, Oct. 7.

This Association is one of the strong financial institutions of Jackson county. It is the largest building association in the county. It is conservatively managed and the interests of its stockholders are carefully guarded.

The plan on which the Association is conducted is this: Twice a year a new series of stock is started. At these times any persons wishing to invest, subscribe for as many shares as they wish to carry. These shares call for an investment of 25c per share per week. The money thus accumulated by the Association is loaned to stockholders who wish to borrow, on first mortgage security. Every three months the earnings are distributed to the credit of the stockholders in proportion to the length of time their stock has been in force and in proportion to the number of shares carried. This plan makes the investment absolutely secure. When the payments on the stock and the dividends which accrue, have amounted to $100.00 the stock is matured and the stockholders receive their money. The plan is so simple and the payments each week are so small that they are scarcely missed week by week; yet in a little while a sufficient sum has been accumulated to enable one to purchase his own home, to increase his business investment or to do any one of a score of other things where some ready money will be helpful.

The new Series "D" will start next Monday, October 7. See the secretary, Thomas J. Clark, Opera House block, for full particulars and take as many shares as you wish to carry.

The 1912 Jackson County Directory

Including the Incorporated City and Towns of
SEYMOUR, BROWNSTOWN and CROTHERSVILLE
AND EVERY TOWNSHIP IN JACKSON COUNTY

This is the first complete Directory ever issued for all of Jackson county including the city of Seymour, the incorporated towns of Brownstown and Crothersville, and every township in the county.

The Directory was compiled under the direction of the Seymour Republican by canvassers who made a house to house visit of every home in the county, securing at first hand the names and information.

The Directory contains 368 pages and is substantially bound in cloth.

The Directory gives the occupation and the postoffice address of every person in Jackson county.

The Directory indicates all real estate owners by a star after the name, and in the township lists it gives the number of acres owned by every farmer in the county.

The Directory lists a man and his wife in the same line so that family relationships are easily seen.

The Directory is completely indexed on Page 2, and explanatory notes indicate all the details used in compiling it.

The Directory will be useful to you in a score of different ways through the vast amount of detailed information which it gives.

FREE ADVICE TO SICK WOMEN

Thousands Have Been Helped
By Common Sense
Suggestions.

Women suffering from any form of female ills are invited to communicate promptly with the woman's private correspondence department of the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established a confidential correspondence which has extended over many years and which has never been broken. Never have they published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the Company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which they have to draw from, it is more than possible that they possess the very knowledge needed in your case. Nothing is asked in return except your good will, and their advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Address Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass.

Every woman ought to have Lydia E. Pinkham's 80-page Text Book. It is not a book for general distribution, as it is too expensive. It is free and only obtainable by mail. Write for today.

WHY DON'T YOU TAKE BETTER CARE OF YOUR HAIR!

Don't let it turn grey. Don't let the Dandruff get a foothold and start the hair falling out.

It's not natural that young women should have thin grey hair that they cannot dress becomingly.

It should always be natural-colored—luxuriant—full of life and radiance—free from ugly grey hairs and annoying Dandruff.

Nature intended that a woman's hair should be one of her chief attractions.

Why not help her to keep it so?
